Brikk — Door-to-door agency script

A field-tested cold-walk-in playbook for Southern California brokerages.

Before you walk in the door

Five-minute prep so you don't walk in cold:

- Look up the brokerage on Google. Note the broker of record's name and roughly how many agents they have (Zillow, LinkedIn, the brokerage site).
- Check their recent sales on Redfin or the local MLS. You want one detail you can mention — "I saw you closed three over a million in Newport Beach last quarter."
- Confirm office hours. Best time to walk in: Tuesday–Thursday, 10am–2pm. Avoid Mondays (busy) and Fridays (mentally checked out).
- Bring: a phone with the Brikk demo loaded and logged in, a stack of business cards, a one-pager (use the Company Rundown PDF, printed).
- Wear: business casual. You're not a kid trying to sell them stuff. You're a fellow professional.

Who to ask for

Ask for the broker of record or the operations / tech lead. If the receptionist asks who's calling and what it's about, your line is:

"My name is [Your name] with Brikk. I help Southern California brokerages get their agents to actually follow up on their leads. Five minutes if [broker name] has it."

Three things this opener does:

- Names the problem they have (follow-up).
- Localizes you (Southern California — not some random SaaS company in San Francisco).
- Caps the time ask at five minutes. They can almost always spare five.

The 30-second opener (face to face)

Script (memorize this — say it in your own words but hit every beat):

"Hi [broker name], I'm [Your name] with Brikk. I'll be quick. Three out of four buyers go with the first agent who responds to their inquiry. But the average agent takes 15 hours to respond, and most stop following up after the third try — when 80% of deals close on the fifth touch. Brikk is the tool that fixes both problems. We're $75 a month per agent, and we have a flat agency plan for brokerages like yours. Can I show you the screen for two minutes?"

Notice the structure:

- Stat → stat → bridge → product → price → ask.

- Price is in there early. If they hear "$75/mo per agent" and they're already paying $300 for Lofty, you have their attention.
- The ask is for a two-minute screen demo — not a meeting, not a follow-up, just two minutes.

If they say yes — the two-minute demo

Open the app on your phone, signed in, with realistic test data. Walk through:

0:00–0:20 • Today screen

"This is what every agent on the platform opens in the morning. Brikk has already read their pipeline and ranked what needs attention — this hot lead is two days cold, that closing is in three days. They never wonder what to do first."

0:20–0:50 • Copilot

"This is the part nobody else has. Watch." Click Generate drafts. Wait. When drafts appear: "AI read each lead's history — what they told us, what we sent before, how long it's been. It wrote the next message. The agent reads it, approves, edits, or skips. Approval logs the contact automatically. Most agents tell us they save 30–45 minutes a day on follow-up."

0:50–1:10 • Marketing ROI

"Most brokerages buy Zillow leads or run Facebook ads and have no idea which channel actually closes. Brikk shows you — by source, by hot-lead rate, by conversion. One of my customers cut Zillow spend in half after seeing this."

1:10–1:30 • Team plan

"For an office your size, we have an Agency plan. Flat fee, unlimited seats. You generate one team code, your agents sign up with it — no per-agent billing, no IT setup. I can have your whole team on this by Friday."

1:30–2:00 • The close

"There's a 45-day free trial. No card. The way I'd suggest doing this: pick three agents you trust to try it for two weeks. If they're closing more or saving time, we talk about rolling it out office-wide. Can we set up those three accounts today?"

Objections — what they'll say and what you say back

"We already use Lofty / FUB / Chime."

"Most brokerages we sign up are coming from Lofty. Three things they tell us. One, Lofty is $300–500 a month versus our $75. Two, Lofty took them six weeks of onboarding; we take five minutes. Three, Lofty reminds you to follow up — Brikk writes the follow-up for you. We're not the same product. I'd love to put your three best agents on it for two weeks side by side with Lofty and let them tell you."

"My agents won't adopt another tool."

"That's the most common objection we hear, and it's why we built it the way we did. Most CRMs fail because the agent has to do work to use them. Brikk does the work — it tells the agent who to call, writes the message, logs the contact. If your agents already use their phone, they can use Brikk. Free trial costs you nothing, and if they don't use it in two weeks, we walk away."

"How much for our whole office of 30?"

"That's our Agency plan — custom. Depending on the seat count, somewhere between $400 and $700 a month for the whole office, which is less than one agent's seat on Lofty. I can email you a proposal today. What's the best email?"

"What about data security?"

"Every agent's data is isolated by row-level security at the database layer — your agents can't see each other's leads, and no external party ever sees agent data. We're built on Supabase and Vercel, both SOC 2. We never sell data. I can send you our privacy policy."

"What about MLS integration?"

"On the roadmap for the next 90 days — Bridge API integration. Right now agents can paste listing details into Copilot prompts. If MLS integration is a hard requirement, I'll flag your office as a launch partner — first to get it."

"Send me something."

"Absolutely — what's the best email? I'll send a one-pager and a five-minute video. Can I follow up Thursday? Quick question while I have you — if everything in the pitch was true, would this be something you'd seriously consider?"

"Call me next quarter."

"Will do. Quick question — what changes between now and next quarter that makes this easier to evaluate then? I ask because most agents who say that are dealing with something today that Brikk fixes today. If now isn't right I'll wait, no problem."

If they say no — leave the door open

"Totally understand. Here's a one-pager and my card. If anyone in the office is curious, send them my way — I'll set them up free for 45 days, no commitment. Have a good one."

Then — and this is the important part — walk out friendly, walk in the same office in 90 days. Most brokerages don't buy on the first visit. Three visits is the average.

Daily run sheet — what good looks like

- Target: 12 doors knocked, 4 conversations, 1 demo per day. That's roughly 5 hours of fieldwork.
- Track everything in a spreadsheet (or in Brikk itself — add brokerages as "leads" with type="Brokerage").
- Follow-up cadence after a demo: day 1 (email), day 3 (text), day 7 (email), day 14 (phone), day 30 (drop-by).
- Drop-by 90 days later regardless of outcome. The first office to say no often becomes the loudest customer.

Leave-behinds — what to give them on the way out

- Business card with your phone number and [brikk.store/r/\[your code\]](https://brikk.store/r/[your code]) on the back as a QR code.
- One-pager — print Page 1 of the Company Rundown PDF (this folder).
- Short video link — "See it in 90 seconds: brikk.store/demo" (build this with the AI video guide in this folder).
